David's family business is the Leventis-David group, which owns the Coca-Cola Hellenic bottling plants. It is believed that were carrying hemp clone plants, hemp seeds and Swissx CBD oil products as part of their new venture.

In addition to being the founder of FilmOn.TV and Hologram USA, David also has a business selling oil extracted from cannabis plants, which he markets as a treatment for a range of conditions.

But lawyer Dr. Henry Browne told The Kitts Nevis Observer: 'The mere possession of marijuana seeds is not a crime. What is a crime is to have the seeds and to come to an agreement to plant the seeds.

'Planting the seeds for the purpose of cultivation is a crime. The mere possession of the marijuana plant is illegal.'

In a statement the Office of Prime Minister Dr. Timothy Harris said: 'Non-nationals would not be permitted to secure advantages over nationals as we set about to build out a marijuana industry.

'The government has not granted any license to anyone to import plants or seeds into the Federation and that [the] administration has not had any conversation with any foreigner about setting up businesses to trade in cannabis.'

Cannabis Bill, 2019, is set to be passed in St Kitts and Nevis that will allow the importation of cannabis for medicinal, religious and recreational purposes, according to the bill.

David has already hit the headlines this month after he was forced to resign as a former employee after losing a sexual harassment lawsuit.

DailyMail.com has contacted The Royal St. Christopher and Nevis Police for comment. A representative of Rhys Meyers for comment.
